Captain Wirz's widow lives in Trigg County, Kentucky, with one child by her union with him, and two by a former husband. A daughter of Captain Wirz by his first wife is, we hear, a governess in an English nobleman's family, and judging from her letters is an accomplished lady. She as well as her family here, have been constant ly urging Mr. Schade to see that the body of Captain Wirz should receive Christian burial."

CHARLESTON.

TUESDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 16, 1869.

There are signs on the wharves and in the streets and at the railroad depots that there is to be this year a large crop of cotton. The warehouses and storerooms are piled up high with guanos, superphosphates ingly at St. Louis, Cincinnati, Milwaukee and and fertilizers of every description, and the railroads are fairly staggering under the load of their unsavory fertilizer business. Every farmer and planter has been encouraged by the results of the operations of the year. Wherever the caterpillar did not make its appearance, the plan--Five Tennessee newspapers have already | ters have made money, and the net profit on the cotton crop of South Carolina, now in the pockets of the producers, would be more than enough to pay off our whole State debt of five million of dollars. This is making a good beginning-the better because our people had almost made up our minds that they were undone to all eter--Brigham Young is said to be not too nity, and the Micawbers of the State had well-nigh ceased to hope that something would turn up. What we have made will be taken care of, not wasted. There is abundant proof of this in the way that the farmers are going to work.

Free negro labor is not yet reliable. It is the best that we have—all that we have: but the aim of the planter now is to economize labor by limiting the area in cultivation and to give the freedmen such money wages or share in the profits of the crop as will enable him to reject all but the best hands. There is no desire to rush headlong from one extreme to the other, and cultivate fifty acres instead of five a cultivation because cotton enty-eight and thirty cents the plan is to till the land thoroughly and to increase the crop by the free use of fer tilizers, not by adding to the number of acres to be handled during the season.

The wisdom of this policy is very evident. It costs no more to cultivate five hundred acres, which will produce two -John R. Branner, late President of the bales to the acre, than the same area which will produce one bale or half a bale to the acre. The only additional cost of any consequence is that of the fertilizers that may be used, and this is as nothing in comparison with the increase of the crop. Last year the quantity of fertilizers used in this State was very small; but this year it promises to be larger than in any year since or before the war. The people have the money. They know how well it pays to invest that money in fertilizing material; and we may look forward to producing in this State, with average seasons, at least 250,000 or 300,000 bales of cotton, to be sent to market in the spring of 1870. And there will be no commensurate increase in the cost of production. If, as we believe. the increase in the crop should be entirely due to improved cultivation and a plenteous use of fertilizers, the net profits will be enormously large. With cotton at twenty cents, an increase of fifty thousand bales obtained in this manner should be an addition of at least three and a half millions of dollars to the net income of the State. This is what we are driving at. We are working, not for an increased acreage, not for a breaking up of new ground, not for a headlong plunge into huge farming operations, but to cultivate thoroughly every rood of land, and to encourage, strengthen and quicken the soil, so as to obtain from one acre the ordinary product of two. This can be done, and, if there be any virtue in industry and economy, coupled with a liberal use of the whole brood of fertilizers, the crop of this year will assuredly tell the tale.
